Department Overview

Since its foundation in 1979, the KAIST department of aerospace engineering has made considerable efforts to maintain our leadership in national aerospace engineering programs by providing high quality education and by contributing to advancements in aerospace technologies. Despite our short history, we have made significant progress in aerospace education and research, and our reputation for excellence has been well recognized by academic institutions and industries worldwide. Our new curriculum extends traditional aerospace education to emerging disciplines to make our education globally competitive. Our long-term research vision largely reflects system and design-oriented disciplines, the mainstream of worldwide aerospace research. As of August 1, 2024, we have 20 tenured or tenure-track professors, 99 undergraduate students, 113 M.S. students, 135 Ph.D. students, and 4 integrated M.S./Ph.D. students.
